CREDIT

3.1 New Course Proposals

- A. PHIL 206 - Philosophy of Religion

Justification: The philosophy of religion encompasses every major subfield of philosophy: questions about what we can know and how (epistemology), what there, the nature and existence of God (metaphysics), good and evil (ethics), meanings of religious words (philosophy of language), the relationship between religion and politics (political philosophy), the meaning of life (existentialism), what happens to us after we die (personal identity), the nature of religious/mystical experience (phenomenology/philosophy of mind), and the construction of arguments related to religion (logic), among others. Such a class is interesting and very useful for philosophy majors or anyone even mildly interested in any or all of the questions above, whether one is religiously inclined or not.
